Brief Profile

Daniela Rando was born on 23 March 1959 in Terni. She graduated in philosophy at the University of Padua in 1981 with a thesis on medieval history. From 1987 to 2004 she worked at the University of Trento, first as a researcher and later as an associate professor. From December 2004, she is full professor of medieval history at the Faculty of Arts and Humanities (now Department of Humanities) of the University of Pavia.

She was a research grant holder of the Alexander von Humboldt-Stiftung at the Monumenta Germaniae Historica in Munich, Bavaria (1993-1994), the Henkel-Stiftung in Bonn (1998/1999), and the Max-Planck-Institut für Geschichte in Göttingen (2000). She participated in the programme “Cultural Exchange in Europe 1400-1700” by the European Science Foundation (ESF) (“Religion, Cultural Differentiation and Cultural Identities”, coord. H. Rando wrote several monographs. Two of them were awarded: Venezia medievale nella modernità. Storici e critici della cultura fra Otto e Novecento, Viella, Roma 2014 (Brunacci Award 2017); Una Chiesa di frontiera. Le istituzioni ecclesiastiche veneziane nei secoli VI-XII, Bologna, Il Mulino 1994 (Monselice-Brunacci Award 1994). A third one was translated into German: Johannes Hinderbach (1418-1486). Eine „Selbst“-Biographie, Berlin, Duncker und Humblot 2008.

Research

Dr. Rando's PhD thesis on the Venetian Church of the beginning of the Middle Ages, on the frontier between Longobard and Roman Italy, led her to a comparative approach in her research, attentive to the different aspects of the intercultural exchange, mobility and migration. Such topics have permeated her studies to her more recent work on exile, analysed in both the Middle Ages (exiles/outlaws/fuorusciti) and contemporary historiography (scholars in exile or in 'internal migration'). Several years of research were devoted to Johannes Hinderbach, himself a go-between educated between Vienna and Padua, active at both Frederick III's court and the Papal Curia before becoming Bishop-Prince of Trento (another 'frontier' of Medieval Europe). The research was not focused solely on 'great' History (the Council of Basel, the reconstruction of the Empire in the so-called Verdichtung, the papacy and Concordats with princes, the benefits-system and gravamina of the German nation, the fall of Constantinople and the anti-Turkish crusade, university and liberal arts and humanities culture), but thanks to Hinderbach's autograph annotations to his own library's texts (about 160 between manuscripts and incunabula, thousands of pages rich in notes on the margins), it aimed at re-constructing the character's mental and emotional horizon, investigating topics such as Selbstzeugnisse and autobiography, memory, and the reading and writing of the self. The volume raised so much international interest (reviews, seminars and conferences at the universities of Berlin, Innsbruck and Lausanne, at the Academy of Sciences of Prague, etc.) that it was published a new, up-to-date version in German.

Thanks to scientific relations interwoven in the meanwhile in Munich and Berlin, in 1998-1999 she was able to set up at the Institute for European Comparative History of Berlin a wide-range study on historiography and history of European culture between the 19th and 20th centuries, once again from a comparative perspective. The Gastprofessur in Munich in 2007-2008, at invitation from Claudia Märkl, allowed her to fine-tune this research, which saw publication in 2014 (Venezia medievale nella modernità. Storici e critici della cultura fra Otto e Novecento). Objective of the study was to examine the way in which the historical phase that started at the beginning of the 19th century and finished after World War II conceived, imagined and 'built' the Venetian Middle Ages. The research distanced itself from the canons of historiography to propose transdisciplinary reflections within a wider context of nineteenth- and twentieth-century history of culture (art, history and literature); in addition to this, the research pays critical attention to a 'scientific' kind of writing that took its steps between history and myth, participating in the narrative construction of the historical reality.

During the years spent in Trento, the collaboration begun with the international PhD on "Political Communication from the Ancient Times to the Twentieth Century" with the universities of Innsbruck, Frankfurt and Bologna developed into an extremely enriching experience from both a human and a scientific point of view: participation to and organization of international Study Weeks, tutorship of Italian and German PhD students, exchange of teaching traditions between three European countries (D, A, I) and between Italian universities. The productive cooperation with the University of Frankfurt has recently resulted in the participation in the research project "Personalentscheidungen bei gesellschaftlichen Schlüsselpositionen" (Personnel Choices for Key-Positions in Society). The project, which successfully passed a severe examination by DFG, implies a hard interdisciplinary work, achieved through frequent meetings, seminars and conferences.

The co-opting on the Board working on the “Regesta Imperii” involved the task of promoting and coordinating researches on the imperial papers and records in Italy over the time span between Charles IV and Sigismund of Luxemburg. The relations between Empire and Italy during the 14th and 15th centuries are one of the threads that will be explored in the next years. The third thread of current and future research is that of exile and migration, already approached, in collaboration with German colleagues, for the writing of an American encyclopaedia and a textbook on migration, and through the biographical study of twentieth-century Jewish scholars. The perspective for the future is that of an intercultural ‘go-between’ between Italy and transalpine countries, cultures and politics, Middle Ages and contemporary era.

Key-topics: mobility/migration/exile in the Middle-Ages and in nineteenth- and twentieth- century historiography; biography/autobiography, memory and Selbstzeugnisse; university and Kulturtransfer Germany/Italy; medievalism and modernity; imagination and narration, Presentism/Pastism.
